This company. It's family at this point. It didn't used to be.

Home was the archives. The hot streets of Riga.

Gods? I mean sure. Ioun and Oblivion. Oblivion and Ioun. Forever with the back and forth. Chaos and Order. But the mania that absorbed some of my colleagues back at the Marble Archive in Riga — you'd think the world was already lost, and there was no reason to be about in it. It just wasn't for me in the end ... the life of only books. Only order. Only documentation. Only paranoia over the return of Oblivion

I'm a bit more of a doer. Or at least, I like it when things get done. As for the Knowing Mother's dear precept of always being forthright. I've found that to ... complicate things a bit too much for me to be a true follower.

But what I've always been really good at is READING PEOPLE and to read people, well, you need to meet people. Occasionally convince them to do the right thing. Or at least, the thing we're being paid to do.

See, when I was starting to wonder if I was going to stay in the library, I had a dream. An incredible dream.

A void filled with infinite stars. You implicitly understand that each star is a person, a mind, sentient. And each star is also a world, millions or billions of minds. Then they begin to snuff out, one after another after another. Infinity ends. It's all consciousness. It's all awareness. All of it. And there are forces that hate that. That want it gone.

When I woke up, all of the sudden i could hear peoples thinking, and they could hear mine — when I choose.... It made them a bit uncomfortable in the library. Especially the more ... religious ... of them.

My relationship now? Well Asterion does like it when I show up with a special package or two from our adventures in the field. The occasional tome that falls off the back of a wagon. And I make sure to help keep things with the Bank of Riga on good terms — I'm no thief, and wouldn't cross THAT kind of power. Not without a good reason.

Worldview: Consciousness junkie. Open your mind man. It's all good. Life is a narrative. Have you ever stopped to consider that the self doesn't actually exist. Oh I'm sorry, did I BLOW YOUR MIND. Sorry. I know that must hurt. Given your past.

Psychic Damage? I know what you dream about. I know how to make it hurt. I tell you in your head.

Some Mechanics:

Chronicler

- Gain proficiency in History, or expertise if already proficient.
- You can attempt to consult the Company's Chronicle, which has hundreds of years of recorded history, insights, and information.
- Pieces of the Chronicle have been missing since the Wyrmrage - find them to gain more knowledge.

❖ Spymaster

- Gain proficiency in Investigation or Stealth, or expertise if already proficient.
- Utilize the Company's spy network to acquire knowledge, find something or someone, run background checks on potential jobs or employers, plant misinformation, etc. Can spend resources to expand and strengthen the spy network.
